

Men's View:

The fairer of the sexes is all a fable
It is undoubtedly clear which sex is more able
While we all toil and work our lives away
A woman's emotions and gossip come out to play.
They are nothing but a plague meant to tempt,
Innocent men they treat with contempt.
In the sad tale of Medea you can see
That women are best when they flee
Away from the lives of good men
Before they kill their own children in their own den.
Women are fickle, much like the ocean
They don't use their brains but solely emotion
They are guided entirely by lustful passion,
They cannot even present themselves in an orderly fashion.
One minute they will praise you and speak kindly,
The next they may harm you, so do not love blindly.
You may be in luck if you marry one who is like a bee,
Graceful, loyal and striking is she.
Otherwise you will be stuck with a sow or an ape,
The filthiest creatures, do not be fooled by their shape.
At first a woman may seem charming and fair,
But of Zeus' most terrible plague, always beware.

Women's View:

How can we be looked down upon with such hate?
When our very own sex opened up the gate
For the creation of the world and everyone in it
For Gaia was in fact a woman, there is no explanation more fit.
Who are the people who handle the affairs of the home?
Who keeps the family in order when the men are out to roam?
Women are able to handle many of these tasks,
While men in the glory of battle merely bask.
The goddess of wisdom was surely a lady,
Her intelligence was not wasted on anything shady.
We, like men, have the capacity for reason,
We do not, as men say, change our mind like the season.
For some reason unknown, we are the worst treated species on Earth,
Even though we are the ones responsible for joyous birth.
It is true that we are capable of playing tricks,
However, this is not a problem that we cannot fix.
If we were treated with any respect.
The reputation of women would not be wrecked.
Women should be given much more credit,
The minds of men are what we should aim to edit.
